COMMUNITY ORGANIZATION: ACTION AND INACTION

by

FLOYD HUNTER
RUTH CONNOR SCHAFFER
CECIL G. SHEPS

Is the process of community "self-study" an effective means of insuring positive social change? How dependent is community action upon generalized prestige patterns, power relations, and decision-making processes?

This report of the processes of a community self-study represents an empirical and interdisciplinary research of community organization, stratification, and social action undertaken by a research team from the University of North Carolina's Institute for Research in Social Science. The research team—representing sociology, medicine, public health, anthropology, and social work—made a two years' study of Salem, Massachusetts as that community went about conducting a self-study to discover its health needs and moved toward meeting some of them.

By systematically observing and recording the processes by which decisions were reached, by which plans were formulated on the basis of these decisions, and action programs were initiated and carried out to meet health problems of a community, this report makes a significant and important contribution to the study of community organization and action. $5.00

"IT'S FUN TO PHONE"

"SO GLAD YOU CALLED"

"IT'S GOOD TO HEAR
YOUR VOICE"

"THE DANCE WAS SWELL"

Just calling up can brighten your day

The telephone can be priceless in emergencies. It's the world's best helper when it comes to saving time, trips and trouble.

But one of its greatest uses has nothing to do with sudden need or calls to the grocer, dentist, hairdresser, electrician, department store, etc.

It's to bring friends and families together.

Just to be able to lift the receiver and talk to others is one of the joys of the telephone.

Isn't there some news you'd like to share with someone right now? And hasn't that someone some news you'd like to hear?

A telephone call that costs so little can do so much to brighten the day at both ends of the line.
